Call for Papers: Determinants of creativity: The case of the arts

Creativity is a powerful force that impacts economic growth, affects labour market outcomes, determines cultural heritage and influences the identity of nations.

This session presents studies on some of the determinants of creativity (and innovation) with a focus on the arts, artistic activity and artists' labour markets. The spatial focus is global, with confirmed applications to Netherlands, France and the US. Preference will be given to research on the 19th and 20th centuries, but contributions from other periods will be also considered.

By bringing together economic and social historians, and a range of research methodologies, this session is intended to provide a stimulating interdisciplinary platform.

If you would like to contribute to this session, please send a title and abstract 1st March 2015. Accepted contributions will be notified by 15th March. Final titles and abstracts will be required by 20th April 2015 for inclusion in the program.
